

THE COMPOST PLANT

To close the loop in the food system turning food scraps and "waste" products into compost and soil mixes that help gardeners and farmers grow more local food.

We believe more local food means healthier communities, and we believe it all starts with healthy soil.

Southern Cooking is Not a Location; It's a Feeling

Grand Opening

October 10th @ 11am CINTAS Dining Hall

We serve southern comfort food such as fried chicken, hush puppies, baked mac n' cheese and a new take on pulled pork sandwiches. Come by and have a taste!

Jaylene Quevedo Brooklyn, New York

At first I wanted to become a lawyer, but my heart just wasn't there. I chose to go into culinary to become a chef because I loved how food made me feel when my mom used to cook for me. She worked full time when also working towards her masters degree. My mom is a bad ass and she pushes me and motivates me to be the version of myself so I dedicate my in the her.

Andrea Pappacostas Peabody, Massachusetts

I began my career in culinary as a pizzaiolo at a local pizza shop, where my passion for cooking grew. Going through multiple different culinary jobs has given me a lot of insight in my field. My father and Gordon Ramsay inspire me with their hard work and dedication. I feel as if my organization and collaboration skills will help make any kitchen thrive and grow.

Mission

Down & Gritty aims to bring the nostalgia of southern home cooking with every bite of food, while focusing on reducing our negative impact on the environment. We have incorporated biodegradable products into our concept to promote recycling amongst our employment and customers.
